Ombudsperson Institution of Kosovo*

In the municipality of Istog/Istok and Kline/Klin, 32 residents lived in a building which failed to meet the most basic living conditions. Some parts of the building were at risk of collapsing and lacked the access to potable water. The majority of residents were children, unemployed, old and sick. Most of them were Egyptian or Albanian. It was reported that this facility served as a prison in the former Yugoslavia.

The institution sent a letter to the representatives of the municipality to recommend relocating individuals from the building and accommodating them to any suitable living space in accordance with the law. It also undertook action to construct a sewerage system in the neighbourhood tenanted by the Egyptian community.

The municipality responded to the letter of the institution stating that the majority of families live in the houses built for them, apart from two families for whom the municipality is still searching the appropriate solution. Representatives of the institution visited families to oversee and verify the facts and to confirm the implementation of the institution's recommendation.
